

Freudian & Post-Freudian Psychology: A Select Bibliography of Secondary Literature

Patrick S. O'Donnell
Department of Philosophy

Some of the titles here are not, strictly speaking, of Freudian provenance or a post-Freudian orientation, indeed, they're highly critical of Freudian psychology. I've included them because they make points worthy of consideration by those committed to the undeniable value of Freudian psychology and psychoanalysis (I assume the significance of a Jain-like approach to questions of truth). The stress here is on titles beginning from the latter half of the twentieth century, many of which have excellent bibliographies for indispensable primary and early literature of the—broadly construed—Freudian tradition. Of the five sections, the fourth, "Contemporary psychology and Psychoanalytic Theories & Therapies," is intended to be merely a representative sample or taste of the available literature here, which of course is quite large. The last of the five sections, "Miscellany," is just that with regard to the range of topics, as it includes works in the philosophy of mind, philosophy of psychology and psychiatry, law, ethics and moral philosophy, the emotions, and sundry other subjects (e.g., personal identity, addiction, and 'Buddhism and psychotherapy') that touch upon subjects and issues directly or indirectly relevant to a fair and open-minded assessment of Freudian (and post- and neo-Freudian) psychology in general and psychoanalysis in particular. I have a related compilation on "Dreams and Dreaming" that may interest readers as well.

Freud's desk.
